EARTH'S VORTEXES & BODY CHAKRAS ARE CENTERS FOR ENERGY EXCHANGE

A vortex is a mass of liquid or energy that whirls in a circular motion. Vortexes develop a central indentation and produce a vacuum effect that attracts energy and matter into its epicenter. A common example of a vortex is a tornado. Earth's vortexes are believed to be electrical, magnetic or electromagnetic in nature. Vortex structures are recurrent throughout the world in the form of atoms, the solar system, whirlpools and other phenomena.

Vortexes serve as portals or gateways into other spiritual dimensions and parallel universes. Certain places on Earth with highly concentrated energetic anomalies are amazing and elude gravity, twist light, induce distorted plant growth, cause odd or elated human emotions and frighten animals. Earth's vortexes are connected to ley lines. Ley lines are numerous geographical areas of alignment with sites that have historical implications like water fords, mountain ridge tops, monuments and megaliths. When Earth is mapped into a dodecahedron grid the equidistant geometrical points intersect into what are known as ley lines. The definition of ley lines here serves as a reference point to their interconnectedness to the true nature of Earth's vortexes. The topic of ley lines warrants its own article.

ENERGY SPINS INTO AND OUT OF OUR REALITY THROUGH VORTEXES

CHAKRAS ARE VORTEXES THAT WE INTERACT WITH THE SUBTLE ENERGIES IN OUR ENVIRONMENT

Vortexes flow either inward toward Earth or upward and emanate out of Earth. The positive and negative aspects of a vortex are that of a pole-type relationship similar to the positive and negative nodes of a battery rather than good or bad labels.

Areas with upward flow are electrical vortexes while areas of inward flow are magnetic vortexes. Like a magnet a vortex with an inward flow draws energy and matter into its center. A whirlpool is an example of an inward magnetic vortex. One feels introspective or even fearful in areas with an inward flow magnetic vortex. One experiences exhilaration and is energized in an area with an upward flow electrical vortex. An upward vortex also boosts spirituality and raises conscious awareness to a higher level.

Not all vortex sites are considered benevolent. The Gold Hill, Oregon vortex was feared by Pacific Northwest Native American Indians. They coined the Oregon vortex as "The Forbidden Ground". Even the Indians' horses feared "The Forbidden Zone". The Oregon vortex is a spherical force field half above and half below ground. It's a place where certain physical facts are reversed; a scientific phenomenon known as Lentz's Law. Visitors within the circle of the site experience an involuntary physical inclination toward magnetic North. Visitors on the flat surface outside of the vortex circle experience a physical inclination toward the magnetic South. The physical inclinations cause a distortion in height that represents the opposite of what is expected.

Vile vortexes are areas of energetic whirlpools known to cause misfortune. The "Bermuda Triangle" is a vile vortex where compass equipment failed and planes were lost at sea.

Many vortexes are known to promote good health. Sedona, Arizona is known for its vortexes and their inherent healing energy. The Phoenix area is a good place to find the latest alternative treatment programs for various diseases. The combination of holistic and traditional treatment approaches drives the success of the overall healing modalities that are special to Arizona.

Earth's vortexes align with Earth's ley lines and the body's charkas align with the body's ley lines. Meridians are equivalent to the body's ley lines and are used in the practice of acupuncture. Chakras are vortexes where energy flows into and out of the body and provides constant contact with the etheric. Humans are innately connected to the etheric realm. Similar to the way vortexes can be exhilarating, frightening or even vile so can our experience with the energy exchanges through charkas. Intuitive feelings of well-being as well as feelings of dread originate at the level of the chakras. Chakras continually transmit and receive energetic information with people, animals, the environment and the etheric realm.

Red = Home/Security

Orange = Dynamicism, Sexuality

Yellow = Will/Consideration
